Puil of Isadora Duncan Returns to This Country

Maud Allan has come back from London. She danced yesterday afternoon at the Forty-fourth Street Theatre. Miss Allan arrived this time with more pretentious surroundings than formerly. Ernest Bloch, a well known Swim mudelan, conducted a large orchestra and the programme closed with a ballet em-ploying the services of several dancers.

ploying the services of several dancers. A frowsy poll of John the Baptist was Miss Allan's complete outfit in the past. Miss Allan, who was a pupil of Isacora Duncan, presents her theories of the dance in admirable fashion. She is youthful and comely. Her gifts were displayed by degrees yesterday. She first wore a mauve drapery, then a pink one opened up the side. In the last act she was an undraped slave. This was the ballet called "Nair the Slave." In her separate numbers Miss Allan danced and mimed to music by Chopin, Schubert and Mendelssohn.

She may be able to revive the interest

She may be able to revive the interest in this demoded style of dancing, but it seems doubtful. Miss Allan's personal attraction seems to lie in a fuidlike grace in the movement of her arms, on which she relies more than most dancers The dancing of the "Storm" prejude was her most interesting performance yester-day. Miss Alian will dance to-day and on Thursday and Friday afternooms.

Pleasing First Impression in New York.

Merlin Davies, a young Welsh Canadian tenor, made his first appearance in New York at Acolian Hall last evening. There was a good sized audience which nearly filed the house and took every opportunity to show approval. Mr. Davies has a well trained voice of a kind which it is a pleasure to hear. He is to be commended especially for recognizing his own deficiencies and limiting his selection of numbers according recognizing his own denciencies and imiting his selection of numbers accordingly. From the first number it was apparent the singer must depend for his effects chiefly upon quality and modulation, and there was but one time during the entire programme that one could have wished for anything other than the piece chosen. piece chosen

The recital opened with a series of The recital opened with a series of charming songs by Chadwick, Coombs, Whepley and Tipton.
